Linguistics:

1. Give the definition of style and explain the aims of stylistic analysis. What are the main approaches employed in stylistic analysis? [user-related vs. use-related variation in language; a definition of stylistics; general vs. literary stylistics; field; tenor; mode/medium of discourse; the three R's: rigorosity; retrievability; replicability]
2. Describe the stylistic markers at the level of phonology and graphology. What are the main differences between spoken and written communication? [definition of the phon. and graph. levels; foregrounding: deviation; parallelism; general properties of sound structure; onomatopoeia; metre; rhyme; alliteration; examples; speech vs writing (permanence; (non-)fluency; grammatical complexity; formality; planning...)]
3. Describe the stylistic markers at the level of morphology. Give examples in terms of varieties across genres. [definition of the morphological level; foregrounding: deviation; parallelism; examples; semantics; morphology; neologisms]
4. Describe the stylistic markers at the level of syntax. Give examples in terms of varieties across genres. [definition of the syntactic level; foregrounding: deviation; parallelism; sentence types; examples]
5. Describe the stylistic markers at the level of lexis. Give examples in terms of varieties across genres. [definition of the lexical level; foregrounding: deviation; parallelism; examples; semantics; morphology; neologisms; denotation vs connotation]

6. How is the notion of transitivity employed in stylistic analysis? Give examples related to media discourse. [functional categories: transitivity; modality; cohesion; transitivity patterns: material processes; behavioural processes; mental processes; verbalisation; existential processes; relational processes; point of view; examples]
7. How are the notions of modality and cohesion employed in stylistic analysis? Give examples related to various genres. [functional categories: transitivity; modality; cohesion; modality: epistemic; perception; deontic; boulomaic; cohesion: repetition; reference; substitution; ellipsis; conjunction; lexical cohesion; examples]
8. Describe the cognitive approaches to stylistic analysis. [cognitive stylistics; cognitive linguistics; the 'writerly bias' (vs. the 'readerly' dimension); conceptual metaphor; metonymy; schema theory: schema; script; slots; foregrounding: figure and ground]
9. Briefly discuss the beginnings of English. [the place of English within IE and within the Germanic family; external history to Old English; OE: its attestations (chief works)]
10. Discuss the main characteristics of Old English; focus on the level of pronunciation and lexis. [the OE period; OE writing and the sound system; a few grammatical features; vocabulary and borrowings from other languages]
11. Discuss the main characteristics of Middle English; focus on the level of pronunciation and lexis. [the ME period; the writing system; pronunciation; a few grammatical features; French and Latin influence on ME word stock]
12. Discuss the main characteristics of Early Modern English; focus on the level of pronunciation and lexis. [the EModE period and well-known literary works from it; major differences between EModE and Present-Day English; orthography; the Great Vowel Shift; lexis; the Inkhorn Controversy]
13. Discuss the main characteristics of Early Modern English; focus on the level of grammar. [the EModE period and well-known literary works from it; major differences between EModE and Present-Day English; pronouns; verbal morphology]

14. Discuss the varieties of Modern English (English language around the world). [US varieties; UK varieties; AUS; CAN; EU-Eng; geographical; social dialects]
15. Discuss some of the early empirical research into the nature of lexical categories. What were the new findings? [research on colour terms (Munsell colour chips; basic colour terms in languages and focal colours) and other cognitive fields/categories; best examples (prototypes); goodness-of-example (typicality) scales and rating tests; the fuzziness of category boundaries]
16. Discuss the role of prototypes; gestalt and attributes in defining the internal structure of categories. [prototypes; gestalt perception; attributes; the principle of family resemblances; the heterogeneity of categories; the attribute structure of prototype categories; the 'prototype gestalt']
17. Discuss the role of context and cultural models in category definition. [illustrate the role of context and the context-dependence of prototypes; cognitive models; the role of cultural models in category definition: illustrations; naive cultural models vs. expert models]
18. What are the basic level categories and what are their functions? [levels of categorisation; hyponymy; folk taxonomies; definition and functions of basic level categories: why/how basic level categories are "basic"; the principle of cognitive economy; the symbiosis of basic level and prototype categories]
19. What are superordinate categories; how are they defined and what is their function? [levels of categorisation; definition and functions of superordinate categories: the highlighting and the collecting function; degree of generality and of class inclusion]
20. What are subordinate categories; what is their function and typical lexical manifestations? [levels of categorisation; definition and functions of subordinate categories; parasitic categorisation; degree of generality and of class inclusion]

21. Discuss the role of conceptual metaphors and metonymies; give examples from science and politics. [figures of speech vs cognitive instruments; metaphors: the traditional approach vs the cognitive view; stand-for relations; referential function and highlighting function in metonymies; mapping scopes; rich vs lean mapping; explanatory and constitutive metaphors in science and politics; metaphors in political speech: explanatory function vs emotional impact/manipulation/rhetoric; disguising function]
22. Discuss the structure of emotion categories. What is the role of metaphors and metonymies in conceptualizing emotions? [mapping in metaphors and metonymies; emotions and physiological metonymies; the interaction of metonymies and metaphors: cooperation; compensation; basic emotion concepts and basic emotion terms; EMOTION as superordinate concept; emotion scenarios]
